Project Description	In the Khmelnytskyi region of Ukraine, many foster families face extremely difficult living conditions. The war and social crisis have left behind a large number of children without proper parental or guardian care – as many as 111 children live without adequate care, most of them in unsuitable housing conditions. These circumstances negatively affect their health, psychosocial development, as well as their opportunities for education and further integration into society. The existing infrastructure for foster families is insufficient and does not provide a safe and supportive environment. If conditions remain unchanged, these children will continue to be exposed to poverty, social exclusion, and limited life opportunities.

The project for building houses for large foster families in the Khmelnytskyi region offers a concrete and sustainable response to these challenges. It foresees the construction of two modular houses that will provide appropriate homes for 16 – 20 children and their caregivers, along with two shelters and two playgrounds. The houses will be equipped with modern interior furnishings and adapted to the needs of children, creating a healthy, safe, and stimulating living environment. The project also involves the participation of the local community, which strengthens social cohesion and the sustainability of results. In this way, the project will significantly improve the living conditions of children without adequate parental care, while also contributing to poverty reduction, greater social inclusion, and the protection of children's rights in the Khmelnytskyi region. |
